Legal Holiday?

Has a district judge authority to transact business on a legal holiday with the consent, tacit or expressed, of all the attorneys in the case? This was the question which was up before Judge Hart yesterday and which grows out of the Davidson-Munsey cigar Iltigation. The particular phase of this much litigated subject which was under the consideration of the court was the confempt proceedings which were instituted against Munsey by Davidson for alleged violation of the original decree of the court, which forbade his using the trade-mark of Davidson's cigar on brands of his own. In the decree Munsey was fined $380 and costs. The case was carried to the supreme court, the bill of exceptions being made up and signed by Judge Hart. This bill showed that proceedings were held on Feb. 23, which was Monday, the first day after Washington's birthday. As a matter of fact part of the proceedings were held on Feb. 24, but the brief record of that day was not sufficient to make up the case, and in the supreme court the attorneys for Munsey—Henderson & Macmillan and R. S. Farnsworth—raised the point that the case was tried illegally on a holiday.

Upon motion of the plaintiff's attorneys the case was reconce.

minari and R. S. Farnsworth—raised the point that the case was tried illegally on a holiday.

Upon motion of the plaintiff's attorneys the case was reopened yesterday by Judge Hart and arguments heard.

The plaintiffs wished to amend the record so as to show the true state of facts and for the establishment in particular that the defendants had consented for the trial of the case on Feb. 23. The defendants took the ground that the record once submitted belonged to the supreme court and could not be aftered even by Judge Hart himself.

Last evening Judge Hart decided in favor of the plaintiffs so far as to declare that the records had been made up incorrectly and asked their return from the supreme court. The case will now go to the supreme court to decide whether or not Judge Hart had the power to alter the record after it had been sent to the part of the supreme court.
